BAN BAE SYSTEMS

Why BAE?

BAE Systems is the world's largest arms producer. Its weapons are sold indiscriminately around the world to clients in over 100 countries. BAE's customers have included Israel, Pakistan, Indonesia and Saudi Arabia. Allegations against BAE have included corruption, bribery and trading with human rights abusers.

BAE and you?

BAE is desperate to recruit university graduates. Each year they spend thousands of pounds on recruiting students to design, build, market and sell the next generation of killing equipment.

There is already a shortage in students wanting to work for arms companies; by taking action against BAE you will be directly affecting their ability to thrive as weapons producers.

If you care about the impact your future job has on conflict and corruption, join the campaign to BAN BAE.

Not convinced?

Counter-recruitment actions work! In 2008 energy manufacturers E.ON pulled out of their graduate recruitment tour following constant protests at the universities they visited.

In July 2010 it was reported that the skills needed for the aerospace industry may soon be in short supply. This means that arms companies are already having difficulty recruiting, which makes the campaign to BAN BAE achievable.

Dick Olver, Chairman of BAE said:

“Without action, the UK's widening skills gap will have become an irreversible gulf.”

Lets help create an irreversible gulf between university graduates and the arms trade!

What you can do about it:

1. Visit the BAE stall and hand out more of these flyers to other students.
2. Join your student CAAT group and take action when BAE come to campus.
3. Visit <http://universities.caat.org.uk/> and find out more.
